Lord Salisbury And Foreign Policy

Salisbury criticised the foreign policy of Lord John Russell, claiming he was "always being willing to sacrifice anything for peace... colleagues, principles, pledges... a portentous mixture of bounce and baseness... dauntless to the weak, timid and cringing to the strong". The lessons to be learnt from Russell's foreign policy, Salisbury believed, were that he should not listen to the opposition or the press otherwise "we are to be governed... by a set of weathercocks, delicately poised ...

Robert Gascoyne-Cecil, 3rd Marquess of Salisbury - Wikipedia

This is a really nice monograph on the final tour of duty for Lord Salisbury at the turn of the 20th century. It covers 1895-1902. Salisbury is probably one of the finest diplomats the British had in history and the only equal to Bismarck in diplomacy (although the book does not cover the period of the 1870s and 80s.

Salisbury was an imperialist: he believed a phase of European, preferably British, rule indispensable for the advancement of the "backward" races and had no hesitation in imposing this rule by force, as he did in the Sudan (1896-99). His foreign policy was directed toward the defense and enlargement of the British Empire.

Robert Arthur Talbot Gascoyne-Cecil, 3rd marquess of Salisbury

Salisbury once defined his foreign policy as "to float lazily downstream, putting out the occasional diplomatic boathook." [9] He defined this as avoiding war with another Great Power, or combination of Powers, and securing communications with the Empire.
